

It is proposed to locate the Methodist University of the South at Raleigh. The bishops and laymen constituting a committee of the Southern Methodist conference, met in this city on the 26th of January for the location of this institution. The railway system of Memphis, which will be completed on both sides of the Mississippi, to be bridged at Memphis, makes Raleigh, with the narrow-gauge road and its facilities, a proper point for the establishment of a university. The Methodist conference, which is the chief institution of learning in the South.
